What Do You Want to Create?

The Full Moon is a good time for evaluation because the Full Moon usually puts what you need to deal with in your face. You are fulfilled or you are filled with strong emotion, or you are fed up, have had enough and can't take it any more, are ready to flee or fly. Whatever is at term will not be able to stay in the womb at the Full Moon.

Sometimes as hard as our life tries to get our attention, we push away. Difficult experiences are just trying to show you when you have a contradiction to your own best blessing going on. You wanted that, but you see this. You say you are going here, but you have just turned left of the destination. You are experiencing resistance from outside yourself, the manifestation of your own birthing or splitting off. Full Moons, when they present a conflict, tell you that you are diametrically opposed to your stated purpose. Full Moons are a mirror.

What is it that you want to create? What are you building? What statement are you making about marriage, about children? Maybe you feel yourself to have been enslaved in the name of love, and now you declare your right to have creative freedom. What chance will you take to create for yourself something that will also be good for another? Can you risk being authentic at home, with your family, and at work?

The Moon in Sagittarius conjuncts Pluto in Sagittarius. We went through the first quarter square when the Moon in Virgo asked the Sun in Gemini if its ideas were working. Does your practice, what you actually do, clothe your speech in form?

At the Full Moon in Sagittarius the Moon asks if your speech has a future. Is it all talk or is it going anywhere? Has it a workable destiny? Do you have enough enthusiasm for what you profess to rise above that which pulls at your heels; the offhanded comment designed to get you to veer, the poison doubt that makes you let go of the reins?

Take note of what is happening. Don't try to keep it in your mind, write it down. Often the very process of writing makes you hang your mouth open at what is coming from your own hand and mind.
